Sexual Assault
Prevention is Possible

Young people frequently experience sexual violence online. At school, in their relationships, however many students tell us that they don't feel like they have the skills to navigate these complicated issues, making it harder to get help and support.

It's never too early to talk to your kids about boundaries, consent and sexuality.

Starting these hard conversations can build trust and openness with your kids.

Funding to help stop sexual violence

richardmackenzie.ca

Central Nova MP Sean Fraser announced funding for the Antigonish Women's Resource Centre (AWRC) and the Antigonish Sexual Assault Response Team (ASART) for a period of three years, which will help to fund the centre's work to support survivors and provide services to the community.

Go to the communities where it's already happening and this, going to help programming at the local level bring an end to sexual violence in our community.
