

DOLLY ASHE of the Coady International Institute was among the 14 people who lit candles at a Dec. 6 commemorative service in Antigonish.

CANDLES AND roses, symbols of peace and remembrance, were part of many commemorative services across the country Dec. 6. Community groups and governments are hoping girls like eight-year-old Marion Miller of Antigonish will be a generation of women free from the violence, discrimination and inequality that plagues some their predecessors.
